British Museum. Papers, 1671-1858

The British Museum, established in 1759, is second only to the Public Record Office as a significant British depository for manuscripts relative to American History. Papers acquired at an early date are arranged by collection; but, with the acquisition of the "Sloane Manuscripts," the library began numbering its acquisitions consecutively as "Additional Manuscripts." Often large blocks of papers essentially forming groups will be found; these are designated by number as well as Collection name, for example, Bouquet Papers or Newcastle Papers. For a description of the collection in the Survey Library, attention is called to the Guides listed in the introduction to this section.
